Course Content

“SHOKU-gaku” is a new concept that for the first time, integrates oral science with the existing disciplines of food science and nutrition science.
In 2020, Tohoku University Graduate School of Dentistry, in collaboration with Tohoku University Graduate School of Agricultural Science and Miyagi University School of Food Industrial Sciences, introduced the concept of “SHOKU-gaku”. “SHOKU-gaku” is a new Japanese word that combines “Shoku” and “gaku”. “Gaku” is a Japanese word meaning “field of study or discipline”, so “SHOKU-gaku” indicates the discipline of “Shoku”.
The goal of “SHOKU-gaku” is simple yet profound. It aims to realize lifelong health and wellbeing through correct eating and right food.
In this lecture, we will introduce the basic concepts, our practices, and the future of this “SHOKU-gaku”.

Week1 : Food and Oral Function 1

The first week covers the basics of oral morphology and function. Specifically, students will learn about mastication, swallowing, and taste as oral functions, as well as oral morphology. The relationships between taste, mastication, and brain function will also be explained.

There are two types of schedules for gacco's Courses.

Regular courses: Just like university lectures, all participants follow a uniform schedule determined for each course.

Variable start date courses: The course schedule is determined according to the start date and time of each participant.

*Please click here for more information about gacco LIVE, a live broadcasting service.

When taking a variable start date course gacco offers "Variable Start Date Courses," which allow each participant to start taking courses at his/her own time.

The course schedule (chapter release dates, assignment submission deadlines, etc.) for courses with variable start dates is determined according to the start date of each participant.

The deadline for each assignment is shown on the "講座" page in the study list. Please be sure to check it.

The "Course Start Date" and "Course Close Date" can be found on the "マイページ".

Please note that you will need to issue your own completion certificate before the course closes.
